What happens in a: REACTIVE SCHOOL

STUDENT ACTS OUT

• Student seen as defiant

• Teacher tries to discipline student

ESCALATION
No intermediary school response for de-escalation

• Student perceived as violent

• Police called, and student arrested

LONG-TERM EFFECTS
Student now has record
Misses instructional time
Stressful + traumatic for student and family

OUTCOME

What should happen in a: TRAUMA-SENSITIVE SCHOOL

STUDENT ACTS OUT

• Attempt to redirect behavior

SUCCESS
Student calms down or

ESCALATION
Progress up continuum

• Student needs to go cool off

DE-ESCALATION
Student brought to a safe space to cool off

• If medical attention required, bring in nurse, counselor, or call caregiver

RESTORATIVE DISCUSSION:

What happened? (ID Potential Triggers)
Who was affected and how?
How can we mediate the situation?
Student and teacher decide together how to move forward

“Identified skill, knowledge, and belief gaps that led to reactive schools:

Behavior management gap

School policy & admin gap

Belief & attitude gap

Local & state policy gap

Juvenile justice issue: Policy Gap Advocacy Gap

healthyandreadytolearn.org
RACIAL EQUITY IMPLICATIONS

1. A black student is more likely to be perceived as defiant, and held to a higher standard of behavior at a younger age. Studies show that black students are “adultified” at younger ages (perceived as being less innocent, more responsible for their actions).

   Source: https://www.apa.org/news/releases/2014/03/black-boys-older

2. Black students will then be punished more harshly for these perceived behavioral problems. Studies show that black students face harsher punishment than other students regardless of school type, rate of poverty, or type of punishment.

3. If there are police officers in the school, the likelihood of arrest and commitment increases, and arrest rates are higher for black children. Black students are more likely than white students to be arrested for the same types of offenses.

4. Black children are more likely to be committed than white children, setting them up for a legal record creating a school-to-prison pipeline. Research shows that black children are more likely to be committed for delinquency offenses (essentially charged in the juvenile justice system) than white children.

USEFUL RESOURCES FOR CREATING TRAUMA-SENSITIVE SCHOOLS:

- What could it look like?:
  https://youtu.be/yvXrmi5kbi0

- Are we a trauma-sensitive school? (checklist):
  http://www.lesley.edu/sites/default/files/2017-06/trauma-sensitive-school-checklist.pdf

- How does trauma affect the brain, body, and behavior of children? What is the impact on learning?
  https://hrl.nyc/node/trauma-importance-educators

- Trauma-sensitivity 101 online training:
  https://hrl.nyc/node/online-trainings

Sources: https://www.sentencingproject.org/publications/racialdisparities-in-youth-commitments-and-arrests/

healthyandreadytolearn.org